An Important Sale.

THE TERMINAL is printing a monster legal notice of Executrix's Sale of Real Estate at Private Sale. The sale is made by Josephine E. P. Ginn of Los Angeles, Executrix of the will of Frederick B. Ginn, deceased. This business is being transacted by Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, the well known attorneys in charge, for the executrix at 718, Pacific Electric Building at Los Angeles or at 615, First National Bank, Oakland. The sale which involves important acreage about Richmond's northern deep water front about San Pablo Bay, having been much sought by agents of the Union Oil Company, of the Western Pacific and other large corporations. Now as there is an opportunity for the sale of these holdings, the heretofore overlooked north bay shore will come rapidly into prominence.

Richmond's charter is now receiving careful consideration. The question is worked on a still hunt. Large game, particularly wild is more readily bagged in that way.

The editor of this paper desires to acknowledge the receipt from E. H. Harriman, a publication of an excellent treatise on "Trsn-portation of Mineral Products" submitted before The American Mining Congress at Pittsburgh, Pa., received too late for this issue.

IT'S GOVERNOR COSGROVE.

Governor Samuel G. Cosgrove has passed through all the stages of the Washington primary law and took the oath of office at Olympia Wednesday having been conveyed to the State house from the Southern Pacific car in an automobile. The ceremony was brief and the Governor stood the ordeal very well.

After the inauguration Governor Cosgrove and Mrs. Cosgrove boarded the Southern Pacific special and returned to Paso Robles.

YE ELEMENTS; YE GODS!

California has experienced very heavy downpours of rain and Richmond has had her share. The weather was very freaky and a weather bureau man would have to shift at a rapid pace to get reports of the weather. Richmond was without its mantle of the white "beautiful." The storm clouds scudded from the south southeast and southwest, shifting to the east or to the west for a brief duration, mingling just enough cold air with the balmy south winds to manufacture heavy downpours.

On the bay Jupiter Pluvius, Poseiedon, Neptune and Zeus seemed to have control of the elements.

The tide trying to pass out of the Golden Gate, met by the wonderful and awe-inspiring breakers which combed the bar and dashed the spray upon the rocks under the furious blasts of the gale, made immense swells that dashed into the Golden Gate against the outflowing tide, the storm from the south also blew against the outgoing tide. The "flood waters" of the Sacramento loaded with "slickens," re-enforced with muddy waters, the outgoing tide with a strong "vis a tergo;" the new moon and the peculiar attractions of the planets helped to produce the wonderful increased flood tide in San Francisco Bay, such as was not known for fifty years. The cumulative [illegible] the levees of Richmond [illegible] and the tide [illegible] its [illegible] was wont to play. The [illegible] The boulevard [illegible] sea serpent stranded and the tidal [illegible] a portion at [illegible] of the transfer.

[illegible] was a stormy day on the bay. The waters muddy and foamy [illegible] from Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers [illegible] with choppy waters [illegible] cross currents from [illegible] reversed tidal action [illegible] to scuds by [illegible] of tides. The [illegible] of the Southern Pacific did not [illegible] so much as the Key Route and for that reason the [illegible] rode on these boats, but the most conservative preferred the Southern Pacific [illegible] ferryboats in the driving storm on the bay waters [illegible] The small craft were anchored behind the islands in safety. The god Neptune [illegible] one of the Standard Oil barges. Richmond anchorage at the deep water was perfectly safe. Many steamers stopped at the wharves at Point San Pablo and Point Orient in Richmond, while the storm winds were most furious.

With a dark, overcast sky, a murky stormy atmosphere above and [illegible], turbulent waters beneath, working upon the depressor nerves of some people on the ferryboats caused the operations of Jonah and the whale to be reversed when the boats pitched and rolled. McAdie, the assistant weather clerk, solved many problems.

NEW RICHMOND LAND CO.

The New Richmond Land Company has organized with capital stock amounting to $250,000. The following are the directors: J. A. Chanslor, C. A. Canfield, W. G. Chanslor, Edward Chambers, G. S. Wall. The tract is beautifully situated between East Shore Park and Stege and Macdonald avenue, and will be called Wall's addition to the City of Richmond. The deeds were passed over from the Realty Syndicate to J. A. Chanslor in whose name they stand on the record. This tract will be greatly known for its railroad development. The terminus for the Key Route will be at Wall Street Boulevard, which will intersect a new electric road of the East Shore & Suburban from Stege to Macdonald avenue. The Key Route will pass over Cutting Boulevard to the Wall street Boulevard, which will make a very desirable terminus where will be a station. The Southern Pacific in making a loop from North Berkeley will swing around the Santa Fe Railway at San Pablo avenue and will probably make a station at the northern terminus at Wall street Boulevard on its line that will parallel the east and west line of the Santa Fe, connecting at Macdonald avenue near the eastern approach of the Macdonald avenue subway. The Santa Fe, which will use the beautiful gasoline motors, will also have a station on Wall street Boulevard. The terminal station of the Key Route on Wall Street Boulevard and a Southern Pacific and Santa Fe local station on the same great commercial street way will put the entire tract in the highest order of development and the property will be in active demand. San Pablo avenue, where it crosses the Santa Fe, is too near the foot hills to make a business street of great importance, so a business street through the center of the valley from Stege, north and south to Macdonald avenue is in good demand.

Mr. Lloyd of San Francisco gives assurance that Macdonald avenue will be widened east along his frontage standard width to San Pablo avenue. Macdonald avenue then will be the only developed east and west commercial highway yet opened all the way through east and west across the great San Pablo valley.

Each individual director of New Richmond Land Company have high financial and commercial standing. C. A. Canfield, is connected with the Associated Oil Company, and is a Los Angeles banker; J. A. Chanslor and W. G. Chanslor have thousands of acres of proven oil territory at Midway and W. G. Chanslor owns a large automobile store in Los Angeles, and J. A. Chanslor has been closely engaged in handling the San Francisco end of the Associated Oil Company. Edward Chambers is traffic director of the Santa Fe railway system; George Wall has been successful in the management of Richmond Land Company and has assisted to secure many enterprises on Macdonald avenue.

CENTRAL RICHMOND.

The Central Richmond Land Company holds its Richmond meetings at the office of C. J. Rinn until the return of A. L. Spellmeyer. It is making good progress. San Pablo avenue on its eastern boundary is a Class A business street. The men behind it are financiers. At the opportune moment, about March 15th, the tract may be opened.

The time is not far distant, when improvements are made in our city, sewers, street and lighting, when all the subdivisions from the County Line to San Pablo will want to annex to Richmond to get street lights and police protection. Richmond County will follow the annexation.

CONDOLENCE.

Local Union No. 642, U. B. of C. and J. of America.

Richmond, Cal. January 25th, 1909.

B. of C. and J. of A., in council assembled, that we greatly deplore the affliction of the family and extend to them our heartfelt sympathy in this, these hours of sorrow and bereavement and be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the sorrowing family, and to the public press, and also be spread upon the minutes of this "Local."

The steamer Shawmut, at Point Orient this week, loaded 9000 barrels of wine and 4500 cases of wine consigned from the California Wine Association for New York City.

At the last meeting of the City Board of Trustees, it appeared that two trustees were in favor of Lee D. Windrem for city attorney to succeed City Attorney Hart, if he resigned, and two favored Benjamin Griffins, and one has not decided.

The one who attends to the fire horse in Firehouse No. 2 says that the horse will be made to drive single all right. If the horse works double as it is said he will a mate may be purchased and Richmond will then have as good a team of fire horses as may be found in the States.

The West Side Library will be open to the public every afternoon and evening till 10 p. m., certain Tuesdays excepted.

Mrs. Whitcomb, Mrs. Weise and George Calfee were encored to an ovation in their warbling at the West Side Library entertainment.

The site for Carnegie Library was centrally located and accepted long ago, which may be repeated for the benefit of strangers.

Now is a good time to get sick. E. N. A. Kratzer has incorporated a medicine company with $10,000 capital, a Richmond enterprise.

Ellen Zumwald was elected president; Elizabeth Peres secretary and Catharine Decker treasurer of the High School student body.

The Ineeda Laundry will be running full blast all the shifts under the new management by Monday, and so Richmond has her laundry at last.

Assemblyman Johnston is working for the bridge at the Carquinez straits. This improvement would bring more Southern Pacific trains through Richmond.

Rev. Sprague Davis it is whispered attended the entertainment of the minstrels at Bank hall this week, but did not attend the West Side woman's library function.

Mrs. Marston, the originator of the idea of the West Side library, read an original poem at the library entertainment. Every number on the program was grand.

The opening of the tract of the New Richmond Land Company's beautiful tract between Stege and Macdonald avenue will hustle matters on the east end of Cutting boulevard.

The High School Shakespearean play netted more than $400. It is possible that some of the shows may be produced at Ye Liberty at Oakland or the Greek Theater at Berkeley.

Up to Thursday night through the two local dailies, there was collected for the period of almost twenty-one days' advertising raised the snug little sum of $55.75 for the aid of the sufferers in the last great earthquake in Italy.

The Williams' Jubilee singers Tuesday night under the auspices of the Woman's Improvement Club of Richmond rendered a most interesting program. Southern plantation songs were charmingly featured and the proceeds of the entertainment went to the Public Library of Richmond.

THE SMOKE IS ON US.

Last week through an error of this office the mailing clerk in the Los Angeles wrapper sent papers of Oakland subscribers which caused some misunderstanding at the Oakland post-office, by our mailing clerk writing Oakland subscribers to call at the Oakland post-office for their papers. The papers which were sent to Los Angeles will be forwarded as soon as returned from Los Angeles. It was our mistake, and both the Oakland and Los Angeles postmasters are in no wise at fault.

W. J. Locke, the attorney at San Leandro was a visitor to the west side this week. If he could get the city attorney position he would come to Richmond.

Assemblyman Johnston returned the keys to Mr. Clarence Odell, his successor in office. It was an ... ver-sight that they had not been returned before.

W. J. Locke of San Leandro has filed an application with the Board of Trustees of this city for city attorney in case of vacancy and would come to this city to live if he received the appointment.

The Board of Freeholders formed a charter that is popular for brevity and contains many good features. It is up to the voter to read the charter carefully, and if he likes it, vote for it, and if not vote against it on February 9, between 6 a. m., and 6 p. m.

The Board of Trustees of this city has repealed the street poll tax of this city. Many of our citizens will remember that this poll tax went into effect under the old Board and that this tax was collected last year. It was wise to repeal it.

Superior Judge William Wells, before retirement from the bench in this county rendered judgment for Contra Costa county against the Metropolitan Surety Co., for $18,732.85, the amount of defalcation of the late county treasurer George Wiley, who committed suicide. John Schleth, Esq., aged 65, a highly respected Richmond pioneer while engaged in house moving on his ranch, near Petaluma, about 11-30 Wednesday forenoon, fell from the building breaking, breaking his neck and dying instantly. The deceased leaves a widow, four sons and three daughters to mourn his loss. Two daughters, Mrs. S. D. Brasch and Mrs. Margaret Bryant, reside in Richmond.

John Murray, constable, has returned from Sacramento, where he interviewed Tom Johnston on Whittier Reform School removal.

Charles Brown, who was employed as a lead burner at Giant Powder works and who lived at 1321 Macdonald avenue, was a familiar figure on our streets. He carried his arm in a sling and with all his troubles his face was always cheerful. Well, readers, his friendly face will never more be seen among us again. His ailment developed into blood poisoning and he passed away at Abbott Hospital and his funeral was at Mountain View Cemetery.

LAID TO REST.

Saturday afternoon all that was mortal of the late A. C. Jenks our highly esteemed and respected neighbor, who passed away, was laid to rest in Sunset View Cemetery near the county line, the Rev. D. W. Calfee, officiating in the last sad rites under the direction of the Carpenters' Union.

RAMBLER MUSINGS.

Items From Our Reporter's Note Book.

Real bravery often must show a hand when least expected. In the late storm on San Francisco bay, the Santa Fe ferry boat, San Pablo, sent out Captain Dunigan, Thomas Free and Roy Bishop in a boat in the angry waves and saved the lives of three men clinging to the bottom of a boat that had turned turtle.

One can nearly always tell when there is a political movement on. At the county seat is an office that will be sought after very much, which is held by a very able incumbent. On that end a fight has started against him. On this end there is a fight on against a certain officer, an official who wears whiskers and smokes a pipe who has been mentioned in that connection along with two others for the shrievalty. The movements are watched with interest.

Horse Collars and Their Use.

"Years ago I gave up the hit, sticky pad," said an intelligent farmer, "and have used only the close-fitting, hard leather collar, which we have endeavored to keep clean. This clean collar, with a good washing of the shoulders upon and nights, has generally sufficed to keep them free from soreness. Still, during the constant use of the riding cultivator in our cornfields the necks sometimes get sore, caused by the weight and the moving of the collar across the skin at each step of the horse. We are all inclined to use collars too large for the horse. Much pains should be taken in the first fitting of the collar, and if it is thoroughly soaked and placed on the horse while still wet, it will usually shape itself to the shoulders. Another thing, we try to avoid a too low draft. The way double harnesses are usually made all the weight comes on the horses' necks, and there is a constant tendency to lower the draft, even until it comes nearly to the point of the shoulder. This should be overcome as far as possible. The draft should be high enough to insure an even bearing the entire length of the shoulder, and neither should the girth be buckled tight enough to cause any draft on the top of the neck. In fact, a girth is unnecessary and need never be used except where the traces are attached to the load above a right angle to the horse's shoulders. Steel collars are in use near us, and I am going to try a pair this spring. I think the principle is right, and they strike me as being very convenient."

Taking Their Temperature.

For three days on the transatlantic cattle steamer, with passenger accommodations, Mrs. Billings had been endeavoring by persistent and continuous questionings to obtain some idea as to nautical proceedings, and the other passengers had about reached the end of their patience.

"Well," remarked Miss Talbot at dinner, as she passed the salt, "I am glad to find that they treat the cattle so humanely on board. Why, they take the temperature twice a day, regularly."

"Oh!" cried Mrs. Billings, in a high, piercing crescendo, "do they, really? I'm so glad to hear it, but I shouldn't think they could very well."

"Why not, madam?" inquired an elderly man on her left.

"Well, well, why," said Mrs. Billings, "I should think that it would be hard to keep a clinical thermometer in a cow's mouth long enough to get any temperature without having it crushed."

His Reason.

"Why do you omit the 'h' from your name, Ben?" asked Will Shakspeare one day.

"For the sake of variety," answered Mr. Jonson; "there is already too much Johnson in the city directory."

Zeal for Learning in Ireland.

An Irish question, hitherto unnoticed, has become pressing. A great library to which students, teachers and the general public can have access is an almost indispensable feature among the institutions of a capital city containing, as Dublin will do, two universities. But as things are, no such library will be available in Dublin.

The staff and the reading-room accommodation of Trinity College, Dublin, are both severely tried by the needs of the university alone, and there is practically no room for outsiders. Then there is the National Library of Ireland, which, considering its slender resources, has done splendid work, but it has only $6,250 a year to buy books, and its available space is sometimes so crowded that one may see readers perched on ladders around the reading-room or two sharing a single chair, circumstances which certainly testify to a remarkable zeal for learning in modern Ireland. The average daily attendance is between 650 and 700.

Pride and Vanity.

Pride and vanity on the part of the average individual, rather than an increase in the cost of raw products or manufacture, are the causes for the present high price of foodstuffs, according to Dr. Le Grand Powers, agricultural statistician of the census bureau.

"People nowadays—I mean the average person, common people if you will—insist upon having the best of everything," said Dr. Powers. "The workingman demands the finest cuts of meat, and he buys better meat perhaps than the salaried or professional man. He does not subscribe to the shoddy doctrine of Edward Atkinson. He has a feeling that he is as good as anybody else, and this asserts itself in his purchases. That is vanity.

"You remember the time, perhaps when a man who wanted to buy a steak threw his basket over his arm and went to the grocery after it. But he won't carry a bundle now. His meat must be sent to him."

That Famous Swim.

"It is a very dangerous thing, I have found, to tell stories to the present younger generation," a Sunday school teacher recently remarked.

"Now, I have always been fond of illustrating the gospel lessons with little stories which helped to point the moral and a favorite with me was one of a young Roman athlete who used to swim the Tiber three times every morning. This generally made a hit with the boys in my class, but one Sunday a new lad with Irish eyes appeared and at the conclusion of this story he snickered audibly.

"'You seem to think that this story is rather funny, Patrick,' I remarked, severely. 'Will you tell us in what respect?'

"'Seems like he might have made one more trip and got his clothes, miss,' he replied, with a cheerful grin."—The Bohemian.

Woman Has Been Scatering Typhoid Germs for Fifteen Months.

Mary Mallen, who was taken to North Brother Island fifteen months ago as being infected with typhoid germs and a danger to the city, is still confined there under observation, says the New York Tribune. She was first heard from on Long Island. A sporadic outbreak of typhoid fever occurred there, which was traced to her. She got away, but when an outbreak occurred in a family in another town it was found that Mary Mallen was the cook there. She left the place and another outbreak in another town was traced to her.

Mary Mallen, according to the physicians, was infected with the germ without being ill, giving out the bacilli and infecting members of the families where she worked through the food. It was not until a family in this borough where she was employed as cook was stricken with the disease that officials of the health department decided to take a hand. She was taken to North Brother Island, where an examination revealed that she was thoroughly infected with the germs.

Since the woman's detention examinations have been made daily, but while she would on some days seem to be free from the bacilli the next day the germs would be found in large numbers. The health department instructed the officials at the island to discharge her if she was found to be free from the germs for two successive days, but for 150 days this condition has not been met, and unless some method of driving the bacilli out of Mary Mallen's system is found her detention may be for an indefinite period.

Ocean Cables.

The diameter of the Atlantic cable varies according to the depth of the water, the character of the bottom on which it lies, and the probabilities of interference from anchors. It is smallest in midocean depths. There is little or no movement at the bottom, and it is important that the cable should not have great weight. A heavy cable in deep water would be difficult to bring up for repairs if repairs were needed. In the shallow water a heavier type of cable is used. These types are known as "shore end," "intermediate," and "deep sea." The diameters of the commercial cables are: Shore end, 2⅞ inches; intermediate, 1¾ inches; deep sea, 1 inch.

WHISKEY FOR LAME BACK.

The increased use of whiskey for lame back rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce Syrup Sarsaprilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring.

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

FOR THE CRY OF A LITTLE CHILD.

In the shadow of Loves Forgotten, by the Ports of Long Ago;
I dreamed of a legion of women whose faces were tenderly mild—

I looked on the waiting women through the mist of a thousand years;
And some of their eyes were smiling, and some were suffused with tears.
Yet they sang as a choir in training, and the song of the waiting throng

I looked on the waiting women, and their faces were white and wild—

What Would People Say

"You know I can't go, Burton. I'm right in the midst of house-cleaning, and——"

"Leave your old house-cleaning, and come along."

"Leave my house-cleaning! What are you thinking of? Do you suppose I could go away with my house in this condition and enjoy myself??"

"I don't see why not. It won't hurt anybody or anything, and this is the first outing of the Engineers' Club since our marriage, and you know I can't go without you——"

"You don't have to stay at home on my account, I'm sure. What would people say if I neglected my house as you propose?"

"What do you suppose people would say if I neglected my wife, as you suggest I should at least appear to do? Married six months, and already away for a good time, and leaving her behind! You'd be proud to have such a husband 'brute,' people would call him."

"Well, I suppose you'd be proud to have a wife that everybody called a sloven."

The voices were becoming gradually more sharp, the words more unpleasant to the ear.

"What do I care what people call you? I think you might consider my pleasure once in a while."

"Consider your pleasure! Just as if I wasn't slaving here from morning to night trying to keep this house clean for you to live in, cooking your meals, darning your stockings, doing every thing a woman can to make a man comfortable! And this is all the thanks I get."

Tears were coming by this time, and Burton Stevens hated tears. With a great appearance of calmness he said:

"I certainly never would have married you if I had supposed it would make you so miserable."

"Well, I wish you never had," was the quick retort. "I supposed I was marrying a man of some feeling, who would appreciate all I did for him, but as it is, I wish I'd never seen you."

This was a little more than Stevens could stand. He rose abruptly from the table, grabbed his hat and coat as he rushed through the hall, and passed on out of the house, slamming the door behind him. Whereupon Genevieve dried her eyes and sat back in her chair, "to think," as she called it, but in reality to give way to the tumultuous feelings that surged over her in recurrent waves.

This was what they had come to after just six months of married life! She had known that feelings changed after marriage, but not like this—not so soon as this. Where was all the love and devotion that had transformed their lives a few months before? Once she had thought that to serve Burton's breakfast would raise her to the seventh heaven of delight. Well, she did enjoy that [illegible]. But he was so unappreciative! He seemed not to understand how she slaved—yes, slaved was the only proper word—from the time he left in the morning until he came back at night to keep their little nest, as he had once called it, spotlessly clean. He was always coming home and wanting her to go off with him on some lark, and he never failed to be put out when she could not go. He ought to appreciate her self-sacrifice, but he never did. He ought to be thankful that his wife was a good housekeeper, but he was not.

Was it worth while, after all? Had she not been wiser to refuse Burton, as she had done all the others, and remain single, free to live her own life, loved and appreciated and admired by her own doting family?

Here the tears of self-pity came once more. If things continued as they were, she and Burton would get to hate each other in time. Would they have to go on living together and hating each other, or would Burton some day get a divorce? She shuddered at the thought. Divorces were getting more and more common, but she had been taught to shun the very thought of them as she would a plague.

But she must get her work done if her heart broke. The woman would soon be there to go on with the cleaning, and she must be ready for her.

Burton did not come home to dinner. A perfunctory telephone message informed her that he would be detained at the office until late in the evening. Genevieve nursed her grievance, and was not her bright, cheery self even by the time they sat down to breakfast the next morning. Oppressed by her chilly politeness, Burton, in his turn, began to wonder if "the boys" were right when they told him that "marriage didn't pay."

The same thought persisted in Genevieve's mind for a week. Whenever she went out to an afternoon social gathering, only the "bachelor maids" seemed to be free to enjoy themselves. They talked about parties and flowers and drives and picnics; but the others discussed the trials of married life, the difficulties of getting help, the unappreciativeness of men in general, and certain husbands in particular, and the awful drudgery involved in keeping a house. Genevieve had not as yet reached the point of taking part in these discussions; she still kept up what she bitterly called to herself "the fiction" of being a happy bride. But when she thought of the years stretching before her, laden with this awful burden of drudgery that apparently oppressed every woman with a home to look after, she wanted to scream. How could she ever stand it? How could she give up all her dreams of happiness with Burton? They had planned to read together, she was to keep up her music and play and sing for him; they had talked of rides and walks in the summer to come, when they were to be "always together."

But even now she was too tired, when evening came, to read, and went to sleep in five minutes if Burton tried to read to her. She hadn't found a minute for practicing in the last three weeks. Would things be any better when summer came, or would she have to give up all these plans as well? Honestly, what was the use of being married? They had had ever so much more fun when they were engaged—and, yes, they had seen more of each other then than they were doing now. Burton spent so many of his evenings at the office that she seldom had more than a few hurried words with him at the breakfast table.

At first, Genevieve had been glad when he stayed down town, and she could go to bed early. But as time went by, she realized that they were growing farther and farther apart. What would the end be?

Burton, too, seemed to be unhappy. His face showed her that, and she was compelled to admit that her husband was suffering as well. What would be the solution of their problem?

"We've you been keeping yourself lately, Genevieve," asked her father in his cheery way, finding her in the old home one evening upon his return from the office. "We've missed you."

Genevieve had stayed away because she feared they would discover her unhappiness. Instead of giving the real reason, she said, "I've been too busy, father. You know I have all the housework to do alone."

The swift look of penetration and sadness that her father gave her startled her. After a moment's silence, he said, "Come here, little girl. Sit on my knee once more, and let's have one of our old-time confabs." Then with his arm about her waist in the old, loving way, he began, "Been out with Burton much lately?"

"No, father, he seems to be busy, and I don't know as I mind that, as I'm generally too tired."

"Why weren't you at the Engineers' banquet? You went last year, and Burton has never missed it before, I've been told."

"I was too dead tired. I was right in the midst of house-cleaning week, and——"

"Didn't you know when the banquet was going to be?"

"Yes, but I had to take the woman then or I couldn't get her until the very last of May."

"Would it have hurt the house to go a month longer?"

"No, but, father, I didn't want people saying——"

"My dear, do you care more about 'people' than you do about Burton?"

"But the work?"

"Do you care more about work than you do about Burton? My darling, listen to a few words of wisdom from your wise old father. Burton didn't marry you because he wanted a housekeeper; he married you because he wanted a companion, a comrade. Doubtless he'd get some one to do the work if he could."

"He's always wanted to get a girl for me, but it seems an extravagance when his salary's so low and I am perfectly able to do the work."

"But you make him pay just the same and something worth infinitely more to him than money. Is it fair?"

"Do you think we ought to have a girl?"

"Not necessarily. Have you ever studied the question of wise neglect?"

"But, father, just think what everyone would say if——"

"Do you really love your husband? Or is pride more to you than love? Let me whisper a secret in your ear. 'What people say' should never come between two people who love each other. Sacrifice your pride—just a little of it—to your husband's happiness."

Genevieve was silent. And after a moment her father went on, very gravely this time.

"My dear, I have seen many marriages spoiled by this fetish of housework. A man always prefers his wife's company to a spotless house. Just think about that seriously, dear child."

Genevieve did think about it. His words sank deep into her heart, until finally she decided to act upon them. She could not make a great change at once, but little by little she learned to eliminate the unnecessary thing. A simpler breakfast, she found, enabled her to appear at the table with an unflushed face and an unruffled temper—and Burton never seemed to miss his more elaborate meals, though he brightened perceptibly under her more gracious manner.

She put away useless bric-a-brac, so there was less dusting to do. She gave up her plan of always having cake and cookies on hand, and frequently substituted simpler desserts for the customary pies and intricate puddings. She did less sewing; she wore simpler clothes and had less ironing; used the sweeper instead of the broom occasionally; let the windows go unwashed for more than a week sometimes—and was amazed to find how well the home looked in spite of her neglect.

She found herself sitting down at the piano now and then, and taking up the old song. She even ventured to sing for Burton one Sunday afternoon and was almost shocked at the magnitude of the pleasure he evinced. She stayed awake evenings, and once suggested a call upon a nearby friend that almost resulted in expression of gratitude from her bewildered husband.

As, little by little, the old companionship was resumed, Genevieve awoke to the enormity of the wrong she had done both her husband and herself. This was life; this was growth. Now they were really becoming one, as they had once dreamed of in their courtship days.

Compared with this, what was housework but a false god that women raised and worshiped, oftimes to the fanishment of their own souls and the destruction of the peace and happiness of their loved ones. God forbid that she should ever again endanger the stability of their home by any such worship of idols. The true ideal is homemaking, not housekeeping. Genevieve had learned, and the motto to be kept ever in mind, "Wise neglect"—Good Health.

Grant's Grandson.

When General Grant, one day near the end of his life, was autographing some portraits of himself for the medical staff, consisting of Doctors Douglas, Sands, Barker and Sarady, his son said, "Father, I would like you to sign this, also." The Century Magazine tells the story.

It was a letter to some future president, asking him to appoint the general's grandson, Ulysses third, to West Point. Without dipping his pen in ink again, the general attached his name to this letter. It was done quietly, but in view of the circumstances, the action was dramatic.

Young Ulysses, the son of Colonel Grant, was then a mere boy. We all know that when the letter should be presented General Grant would have been many years in his grave. It was only a question of months, perhaps weeks, when the hand that held the pen would be stilled forever. Altogether, it was a situation that had in it much pathos. It meant a benediction for the future soldier.

I believe the others must have been equally impressed, for after the scratching of the pen had ceased, there was absolute silence in the room while Col. Grant carefully folded the letter and gently led his father away.

The note was dated and signed on April 3, 1885. General Sherman indorsed it on February 1, 1887, and eleven years later on March 30, was written across the bottom:

"I direct the appointment to be made.
"WM. McKINLEY."

The Barrel on the Sidewalk.

A barrel stood on the sidewalk, and beside it stood a man. The man was dressed in laborer's clothes and apparently was in a quandary about how to get the barrel to one of the upper floors. He scratched his head and pondered, and meanwhile a crowd began to gather.

"Rig up a derrick and hoist it by hand," suggested one man with a clay pipe in his mouth.

The man beside the barrel made no response.

"Get a rope and pulley and hitch a horse to the rope. That'll get the thing up in jig time," suggested another.

The man remained silent.

"Why in the dickens doesn't he put it on the temporary elevator and take it up that way?" asked the man with red whiskers.

"I know a better way than that," said the man with patches on his trousers. "Just rig up a boatswain's outfit, and the thing can be hauled up quick as a wink."

Suddenly the man beside the barrel took a red bandanna handkerchief from his pocket, wiped his forehead, took a chew of tobacco, put the barrel on his shoulder and carried it up to the second floor.

The barrel was empty.—Milwaukee Free Press.

Oyster Shells as Medicine.

Ground oyster shells were given by the mediaeval doctors to children suffering from rickets and scrofula. Now it appears that they were right. The shells contain lime, nitrogen, flour, bromide, phosphoric acid and iodine, all excellent for feeble children. They say that if growing children were to take powdered oyster shells in their food the teeth would be improved.—London Answers.
